What to know about the science of ultraviolet light emitting technology and why its becoming the preferred method of disinfection.

Ultraviolet light is a type of electromagnetic radiation that is responsible for summer tans – and sunburn. This same UV light, in very high doses, is a direct approach to prevent the transmission of airborne diseases. In fact, it has long been established that UV-C is both anti-microbial, and efficiently inactivates drug-resistant bacteria. When the UV-C light emitter is active and exposed to an environment, the microorganism cells die rendering them harmless - in hundredths of a second.

UV-C technology is fast, safe, portable, and effective. When the light emitter is inactive, it poses absolutely no health risk to humans or animals*
